Of course it was always going to be secret, an envelope no one would know had arrived, that I'd lock myself in the bathroom to read.

Nothing like coming down late to breakfast and you saying, "How you failed history I'll never know." Or standing in a queue in the only taverna with a land line, the owner grinning between black teeth, while I ask you "How did it go ?" and wait for a pause that might mean well, or not.

Out on the terrace the dog gets up and drags his chain two steps to the shade.
